Other conditions can also cause tremor and gait disorders. We found that 2-CP was effective for her gait and tremor. However, the cerebral infarction was unchanged. A common treatment for PD includes the administration of levodopa, dopamine agonists, and COMT inhibitors. 2-CP is also a common type of tremor medicine. Thus, 2-CP may be effective for the treatment of gait and tremor caused by other conditions besides PD. Currently, there are three mechanisms underlying the regulation of the development of PD: loss of dopaminergic neurons, the death of cells in the pars compacta of the substantia nigra, and the degeneration of axons, synaptic terminals, and dendrites in the striatum.^{^[[@R2]]^} Excessive activation of glutamatergic transmission due to the loss of dopaminergic neurons in the substantia nigra is thought to be associated with the development of parkinsonism.^{^[[@R3]]^} In this case, the initial symptoms appeared due to the degeneration of the GABAergic interneurons in the cerebellar cortex. 2-CP is a GABA_A receptor agonist. Previous reports have shown that 2-CP can reverse the excessive glutamate transmission in the striatum.^{^[[@R4],[@R5]]^} In our case, we observed that 2-CP was effective against PD. The mechanism underlying this effect is uncertain. However, 2-CP may have relieved excessive glutamate transmission in the cerebellar cortex. This is the first case of an individual with the spinocerebellar degeneration syndrome who experienced gait and tremor that were
