A: If you do not find the update in the Setup it is because you need to perform a clean installation of the product. From the installation media you will need to: Unzip and install the MSI files for the product you want.

In-focus collisions of plasmonic dipoles in photonic crystal slabs. We investigate the excitation of in-focus linear and nonlinear plasmonic modes in photonic crystal slabs, in which optical nanocavities exist. More specifically, we investigate the scattering behavior and the near-field enhancement of plasmonic dipoles with a finite number of dipoles in the focusing zone. We find that the finite number of dipoles can couple the fields of the dipoles in the focusing zone to other modes in the system, resulting in a scattering cross section larger than that of a single dipole. We also find that the scattering cross section of two dipoles in the focusing zone becomes larger than that of a single dipole when they are separated by more than half a lattice constant. These effects become more pronounced as the dipole separation increases, and would be further enhanced for larger dipole separations. We also find that when the separation of two dipoles is less than the coherence length of the radiation source, they can be coupled to more complex modes, resulting in a broad spectrum of radiation and near-field enhancement. These results can be used to design optical devices with higher scattering cross sections, enhanced
