more articles ready to post, I'm just waiting on some information, but I had to write about Lorraine, I'm just not ready to talk about her yet. So, you might not have to wait long for the next one. I'm bringing this up as a reminder that life isn't always fair. If you're a regular reader, you probably notice that I've started to become a bit more of a political blogger over the last few months, I've given my opinions on a lot of current issues, and that is part of why I was surprised when I came across a post on one of the political websites that said that I was on death row for helping someone who had been falsely convicted. What most people don't know is that my wife had been raped by her son. Because of that, I decided to make a difference in the world. I told Lorraine that I wanted to set someone free, and she believed me and asked me what I thought about the case of Eddie Ray Routh. I didn't have a clue
