Healer's Quest is an RPG in a series of free online games. We can say that without it being a spoiler. There are quite a few things that are out of the ordinary about the game. The first thing you are going to notice is that the game is very simple. You have to put a health bar in a certain amount of cells in order to move on. You start off with one cell and have to grow the amount using coins that you can find throughout the game. There is no die roll in this RPG, the chance that you will die is based on your luck. Enemies are in clusters of 3-5. If you defeat them a certain number of times, you get a level. Level gives you a certain number of life points. (The higher level, the higher your life points) A lot of people who like RPGs are going to hate this aspect of the game, but I really did not have an issue with it. There are up to four main areas that you can go to once you grow the cells and defeat enemies that are in them. They are the cell temple, the desert, the forest and the swamp. Each one has its own theme in which you can play, such as a cat for the temple, a witch for the desert, a zebra for the forest and a leopard for the swamp. Each area is also completed with its own boss at the end which gives you a level in that area. You can earn experience points by talking to people in each area, some have interesting things to say, others don't. The RPG style system of Healers Quest makes it so that you can use each area to your advantage. For example, you can go to the forest and get coins from trees, the desert to get water and the swamp to find the cat that will give you abilities. If you go to these areas on your own, you have the chance to collect all the coins, water or abilities in each area that you want. Another cool thing about this game is that you can fight zombies in each area. You do not fight them in battle, instead you do battle with them in a puzzle part. Each type of zombie has different strengths and weaknesses, it's important to know what you're fighting before you go in. Each zone has four levels to them and each level has six zombie puzzles for you to work on. You can also earn different types of coins and items. I do not think that any other game can come close to the amount of

What's new in Healer's Quest:

Preview So, I decided to finally read an MMO I'm looking forward to: Healer's Quest. Having missed out on EverQuest II I decided to test out some new MMOs, hence why I made the one purchase recently: A copy of the complete EverQuest 1 boxset. I've had it for a few weeks, perusing through it some more; keeping the promise above. There's a lot of hype around this game, and the folks over at SOE have been quite busy with EQ2, be it by the design or the marketing department. But, despite this and the fact that EQ2 has seen and enjoyed first with first access, I still really want to try this game. After almost two years I can't remember the last game I actually fully-enjoyed. Though I do have to say EQ2 is a most entertaining game to play. So, yeah, what exactly is this game? Well, on the surface Healer's Quest is a fantastic micro-PUBG. Enter the arena, pick your class and character, ready yourself and then jump into three basic weapons: a pistol, a melee weapon and ranged. Entire matches are on a randomised map layout, with the exception of boss fights. In this case you are told where the boss is before match-making. I'm not sure how I feel about this. I've never really liked micro-PUGBs for exactly this reason: you only ever have a limited play-field and your weapons are strength limited: Two pistol-type arms, a melee-type (so one weapon per class is the most you can use), and no ranged weapon. Visually the game and the environment more than compensates for this. Every class will start out with basic starting gear, but it looks great. JPN is somewhat revered, having created areas like the open world of New Zealand; and in this case, the Anarchy map it's in. The fire in the background reminds me of the fire of the Burning Hells. Though the landscape and environments are not as varied as some other games such as Vindictus or Marvel Heroes, the variety here more than makes up for this. From enormous buildings to vast open areas the map is populated by various locations and functional environments and almost all of them are quite interesting. I do have to admit that initially I felt a bit impatient, games like this are something that I want to just jump into, get set up
